FOREWORD:

Who are our country people and the citizens of our little communities?

In a county with the agricultural wealth of Tippecanoe, seat of a great university, renowned for its agricultural education, extension and experimentation this is our question nevertheless, and almost shamefacedly we must admit we have not had an inventory of those sturdy folk who make up our rural areas.

Our Tippecanoe is filled with men rich in agricultural knowledge and experience, expert in practice, yet too much beyond our horizon. They are our corn growers, the producers of our livestock. They multiply the pure seed for certification and distribution. Our dairymen, our general farmers, are the source producers of the bread and milk for our tables.

Then there are the part time farmers, the factory workers, the people of our little towns all who are native and complementary to our country areas.

The great souled men and women who teach, who demonstrate, who experiment, they are a special boon to every person in our county though their activities extend all over our state and reach out into the whole world.

Here we have a book which intends to present these grand people to you and to help you all become better acquainted not for mutual profit alone but for closer, friendlier association, too.

May this book become an asset to this community and become renewed from time to time so that this service which our people have so long needed may not again be lacking.
